Solidarity in Times of a Pandemic

Insights from a large-scale qualitative research project in Europe and Latin America

This Lecture Series aims to present the findings and implications of our SolPan(+) projects, and to foster an exchange with colleagues who share similar research interests and expertise. The curators of this lecture series are part of the founding team of a collaborative, qualitative, cross-country comparative research project that spans across 10 European and 12 Latin American countries. With hundreds of in-depth interviews during the height of the pandemic in both regions, the aim of the project has been to find out how people (re)act in and to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Sarita Kulli, Adriana H.C. created this artwork for the SolPan+ Latin America project during the acute health and political crisis in Bolivia. With this painting, she proposes a vision of solidarity in the pandemic. It shows several women accompanied by children and men. Together, they weave a colourful loom. In the centre of the loom is a person who has fallen ill. She is being treated with natural and local medicine – since this is within the reach of everyone when the health system has collapsed. On the loom woven of coloured wool, mutual care and solidarity are being represented, in the planting and production of corn and the common pot that feeds the people.
